

The wireless broadband industry has shown - and is still in the process of showing - that the technology exists to bring previously unobtainable broadband internet access to rural America. However the technology is needlessly hobbled by rules and regulations. With more spectrum and more power available, the concept of the "The Last Mile" where many Americans are the stepchildren of the information age, will be a thing of the past.